Funding Resources

At the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health, each academic department administers and awards scholarship assistance; no application is required to be considered for funding. Scholarships are, most often, limited to full-time students. All students in the full-time Master of Public Health program are considered for funding and there is a limited amount of funding for part-time study. Most departments provide some level of assistance for doctoral study. The school also provides a limited number of need-based scholarships administered by the Financial Aid Office to first year full-time master's students. Excluding the Master of Public Health program, students in most master's programs that exceed 4 terms may qualify to receive up to a 75% tuition reduction. Some programs allow the award to be split twenty-five percent (25%) in year-1 and fifty percent (50%) in year-2. You may also review funding opportunities posted on our Funding and Scholarships page.

As institutional funding is limited, students are encouraged to pursue private scholarships to assist in meeting their education costs. This document provides a listing of possible external private scholarships for which you may apply. You will also find useful scholarship search engines here and on our website. Please contact the organization directly for more details and application procedures.
